Bildunterschrift

The conference aims to examine Hegel's reception in the comparative context of nineteenth century European Mediterranean countries against the background of their respective historical developments. In the course of the complex processes by which their national, political and cultural identities were redefined, the transmission of Hegel's philosophy and its criticism played a substantial part in the shaping of national philosophical landscapes and of corresponding political ideas, aesthetic views and literary forms. Retracing the path of Hegelian concepts, with its twists and turns, from Berlin to the Italian, the Spanish and the Greek cultural space, should shed light not only on their development, but also on the universal claims of the World Spirit itself.

Admission free. Registration is required.
